PREFACE

THE publication of these Lecture Outlines calls for a word of explanation. My original intention was to have an outline of lectures printed for the use of my own students. But, through consultation with friends who are engaged in the work of theological teaching, I have been led to believe that the publication of such an outline would meet a more general need.

It is not my purpose to provide a text-book on the Articles. I have no wish to encourage the idea of getting "ready made" Doctrine from one book. Christian Doctrine is too great a subject to be treated in that way. When I am asked, "What text-book on the Articles do you use at Ridley Hall?" I am inclined to answer, "We use the Library." As a matter of fact we have no officially recommended text-book. The result is that I have found myself year after year taking up the time of the class in dictating an outline of study, and leaving myself all too little time for the discussion of the more important matters which require careful and prolonged treatment. I have felt the need of a printed basis which I could take as dictated, and which would allow me to devote the time
