POEMS.

THE LAKE OF KILLARNEY.

IN Erin's verdant, ocean isle
A shining lake is seen,
Where many an islet peers the while,
To stud the lake with green.

And these are crowned with tree and flower,
And vine, or ruins gray,
That show where human art and power
Have been, and passed away.

They're edged with grass, or fringing brake,
Or moss, or beetling cliff;
And, round between them, on the lake
There dances many a skiff.

The boatman's hardy hand propels
His boat with varying oar,
While stories wild and strange he tells,
About the things of yore.
