PREFACE.

THE FRANKLIN FOURTH READER, in the new series, corresponds to the Fourth Reader in the former series, and is intended to be used by pupils of the same class. There is more variety in the pieces, and they are, in general, somewhat more easy of comprehension. With a single exception,—that of Mrs. Barbauld's Hymn to Night,—they are all new. Some are original contributions, in which the compiler has a legal right. The work, as will be seen, is profusely illustrated, and no pains have been spared by the publishers to make it attractive.

The compiler expresses his obligations to Messrs. J. R. Osgood & Co. for permission to take several pieces, in prose and verse, from "Our Young Folks." The same acknowledgments are due, for like courtesies, to Messrs. Lee and Shepard and to Mr. John L. Shorey, publishers of "Our Boys and Girls" and "The Nursery."

He is also much indebted to Mr. Samuel W. Mason, of the Eliot School, for his valuable lessons on vocal gymnastics in connection with the position of the person. Mr. Mason is also the author of an excellent introduction to the Franklin Fifth Reader, in which the subject is treated at greater length.

G. S. HILLARD.
