Mutually beloved by the Author of these
Poems, and by

I have found a resource and comfort in the preparation of my husband's poems for collection and publication. They were mainly written in his early youth, and I read in them of his joys and sorrows, and of his faith, when the days of weariness came, in the higher life where all is light. This will be a very precious book if others can see it with my eyes. Whatever is not worthy belongs to the fond temerity of the gleaner.

C. A. PLIMPTON.
